About Your American Health Lawyers Association Membership

Membership in AHLA is individual rather than organizational and fully portable should you change employment. Members are billed annually for AHLA membership dues and Practice Group fees to coincide with the months that they join AHLA. Dues are not deductible as a charitable contribution, but may be deductible as an ordinary business expense (see your tax advisor). International, paralegal, and student members receive their benefits electronically and do not receive print materials.

Practice Groups: Practice Groups (PGs) provide opportunities for members with similar interest in a particular legal area—or members with a particular interest in an industry segment—to stay current on legal developments and industry practices. Affinity Groups are created to facilitate networking with other members who share similar professional interests. For a summary of each Practice Group, go to www.healthlawyers.org/pgs. Student, Government, and Academician members automatically receive access to all PG content online.

AHLA's Public Interest Mission: Your tax-deductible donation helps to support the development, production, and distribution of consumer-oriented resources that are provided to members and the public at no cost. Written acknowledgement of the donation is issued in January of each year. Information on monthly or other giving opportunities is located at www.healthlawyers.org/PublicInterest.

AHLA Dispute Resolution Service: Experience as a neutral can enhance your knowledge of health law, efficacy as an advocate, skills as a negotiator, and satisfaction as a health lawyer. Sign up to become a neutral on the AHLA panel at www.healthlawyers.org/DRS-Neu.

Health Law Archive: An online searchable database from AHLA at www.healthlawyers.org/archive, containing more than 30,000 health law documents and audio files. New members receive the archive for free during their first year, and renewing members receive special pricing.
